Situation: A Day That Taught a Lesson

It was a bright Saturday morning, and the students of Barangay San Isidro High School were busy preparing for their Clean and Green Project. Everyone was excited to help make their surroundings beautiful and safe.

While sweeping leaves, Marco accidentally slipped on a wet floor near the school garden. His friend Liza quickly helped him stand up and noticed a small wound on his knee. She washed it with clean water and covered it with a bandage from the first-aid kit.

Meanwhile, Jessa was carrying a heavy box of gardening tools. As she tried to lift it alone, she suddenly felt pain in her back. Their teacher, Mr. Ramos, reminded everyone to ask for help when lifting heavy objects to avoid muscle strain. Later that morning, a group of students was burning dried leaves. Ken, standing too close to the fire, accidentally got a small burn on his hand. Mr. Ramos immediately cooled the burn under running water and applied a clean, dry cloth to protect it.

As the day went on, another student, Arnel, fell from a low branch of a tree while hanging decorations. His classmates called for help and made sure he didn't move until the teacher came. He was then taken to the clinic for safety checking. By the end of the day, Mr. Ramos gathered the class and said,

"Today we learned that accidents can happen anytime — not because we want them to, but because we sometimes forget to be careful. That's why we must always think of safety first."
